WORKING PAPERS

- Lighthouse in the Dark: Search in Marketplace Lending (Job Market Paper)
 - Abstract: This paper sheds light on the search friction in the Fintech credit market and examines the impact of public information service on the marketplace lending outcomes. From 2012, the Chinese government gradually introduced private lending service centres (PLcentres) in many cities. I apply a staggered Difference-In-Differences (DID) analysis using a novel data set from a leading marketplace lending platform. To address the potential endogeneity, I use a measure of China's political cycle as instrumental variable. I find that PLcentres effectively boost marketplace lending. Remarkably, PLcentres help borrowers secure lower interest rates from the platform and reduce the dispersion of interest rates. Less sophisticated borrowers mainly drive the effects. The findings imply that PLcentres reduce search costs, pointing to a potentially important role of informational public goods in Fintech credit.

- The Cost of Default in a Cash-In-Advance Economy (with K.Ahn, and D.Lee)

- Abstract: This study shows that corporate default is not trivial to the real economy. Under a Cash- In-Advance (CIA) framework, we examine the welfare cost of default and how the injection of cash affects welfare cost of default. Incorporating the non-linear form of nonpecuniary default penalty into a CIA model, we find that default causes around 1% loss in consumption. The negative effects of a default on welfare is significantly greater in an economy with a higher money growth rate in the long-run.

WORK-IN-PROGRESS

- Green Attention, Capital Structure and Market Integration (with B.Yang)

- Summary: We explore how attention shock affects the credit and equity market integration and in turn affects the firm's capital structure. Google Search Volume measures green attention. More attention brings liquidity to both credit and equity market, which in turn affects the integration of two markets. The financing costs of green firms from credit and equity markets vary with green attention. Green firms adjust their capital structure to respond to the Green attention, but in the long run, it is not necessarily good for the green firms.
